

tory, and the police say that the girls were disorderly. A story told by Fannie Cohen, well-known union organizer and social worker, refutes this.

"I was walking down the street on the side opposite to the Herzog factories," she declared. "Three girls who were walking up and down beside the plant and near the door talking to employees who entered the place were told to move on by policemen.

"The policemen shoved them in the direction of the Harrison street corner. When they reached the corner several detectives rounded up a bunch of them and held them until the patrol wagon came.

"The rest of the girls ran when they saw the wagon. I stood on the other side of the street trying to quiet them. A policeman came up to me. I didn't run.

"Come on," he said, and he pulled me toward the patrol. I protested and another policeman said: 'Let her go. She has been quiet and has done nothing.'

"We've got room for one more, I guess," the policeman answered, so I was arrested along with the rest."

At the Desplaines street station Mrs. Marion Dauchy of 525 Hawthorne pl., a good Samaritan, scheduled a valuable Lincoln parvya residence to obtain their release on bonds. She would only describe herself as "a friend of the girls."

Sarah Lee of 1345 Taylor st. and Dora Velenski of 1300 Morgan st. were taken to the station but not booked, for some reason. Att'y Samuel Heller of Richberg, Ickes & Richberg threatened habeas corpus proceedings to force the police to book the girls so they could be released on bonds.

The others arrested are: Ida Levine, 2146 Flournoy st.; Esther Wiseman, 1248 Taylor st.; Ida Silverstein, 930 Marshfield av.; Belle Miner, 1111 S. Mozart st.; Rose Bender, 1449 Washburne; Esther Brodke, 2146

Flournoy st.; Rose Lieberman, 1128 Marshfield av.; Esther Alsen, 706 Lavin st.; Anna Goodman, 2812 W. 12th st.; Bertha Druth, 1837 W. Adams st.; Eva Steiner, 1445 Taylor st., and Tillie Finesman, 910 Loomis.

And discontent seems to be quietly running through other departments of the Herzog factories. The cutters who make ladies' garments are on the verge of a strike.

These men get from $6 to $16 a week, no money for overtime work or pay for supper when they work in the evening, and are charged 1 cent for each minute they are late arriving at the shops.

The main cause for trouble, however, is that they were told they must spend some time protecting scabs who were to take the jobs of the 200 striking glove workers.

"We were called together last Saturday and told by our boss that we would have to spend part of each day in keeping order among the glove workers," declared a cutter.

"One of us stood up and told the boss he would not serve as a scab. The boss fired him, but he refused to be fired. We all threatened to quit and the fellow was taken back on again."

The cutters, twenty of them, will meet with the glove workers today and plans for organized resistance are to be formed. Demands will be prepared today and presented tomorrow. It is probable that the cutters although non-union will join the International Garment Workers' union.
